Editorial Service Launches Blog

East Stroudsburg, PA (USA)—20 February, 2009. EditsMadeEasy, an American-based online editorial service, this week has launched a blog full of valuable advice on writing in various genres ... for free! The blog capitalizes on the uniquely comprehensive character of the EditsMadeEasy service—a company that offers not only proofreading and editing, but also coaching, fact-checking, manuscript assessment, online writing classes, pre-publication packages, and even career services.

EME's staff is comprised of top-notch professionals in the areas of fiction, nonfiction, academic writing, ESL, scriptwriting, Web content, business writing, and career services. In the words of the company's president and founder, "With a team like this, it's natural to want to share the wealth! We pride ourselves on the outstanding qualifications of the editors, coaches, and teachers who serve our clients. If even more people can benefit from their insights, everybody wins."

EditsMadeEasy stands out in the industry by the fact that it does not make use of general editors who work across disciplines, but rather employs highly-skilled professionals in a wide range of writing fields to work only in the areas they know best. Novel manuscripts are assigned to successful novelists; academic theses and dissertations are handled by professors with PhDs; when clients are in the job market, their resumés and cover letters are prepared for them by a certified Career Services specialist; and clients for whom English is a second language work with some of the most highly qualified ESL experts available on the Web.

Blog articles are categorized by genre and available to anyone with access to the Internet. Comments from subscribers and non-subscribers alike are welcome, and provide the opportunity to engage some of the experts in dialogue. This week's inaugural posts covered topics in academic, Web, career, ESL, and fiction writing, and they will be followed-up in the weeks ahead by more posts on topics of interest to writers in a wide array of genres.
